Internet Content Regulation

LAST UPDATED 03 NOVEMBER 2017

Singapore has a three-prong approach to Internet content regulation.

Firstly, a light-touch classification scheme administered by the IMDA provides minimum standards to safeguard values and promote healthy growth. This is an automatic licensing scheme that requires Internet Service Providers and content providers to comply with an Internet Code of Practice. Secondly, industry self-regulation is encouraged. Thirdly, there is an active public education programme to promote parental supervision over children’s access to the Internet.

More information on Internet Content regulation can be found here.
